The Condition of Trade.

The Condition of Trade.

The Snow-Church Company's weekly review of trade says: A marked change has taken piace in the tea trade during the past few years. It can hardly be termed evolution, for evolution means improvement. Most people would probably call it deterioration, but the former term is more correct than the latter. We have reference to the increasing demand there is for cheap teas.

At one time probably 50 per cent. of the demand was for the higher prices of tess: now probably it is not more than 25 per cent. at the outside. The teas most fancied by retailers of to-day are those they can buy at 15 to 20 cents per pound. But, as a matter of fact, it is not that the people are less concerned about quality than they were, or that they are generally drinking poorer teas than in the years gone by.

The difference is nearly altogether, if not wholly, due to the price. It is the price that has depreciated, and not the quality consumed. For instance, leas that sold a few years ago at 22 to 25 cents per pound so now down to about 15 to 17 cents.
